FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

THE WASHINGTON POST NAMES INTEGRAL SYSTEMS AS TOP DC AREA BUSINESS

Global Aerospace Company Recognized as Leader in Local Survey for the Second Year

COLUMBIA, MD, May 27, 2009 – The Washington Post has recognized locally-based Integral Systems, Inc., (NASDAQ: ISYS) as one of the best businesses in the Washington, DC area. The “Post 200” honors the 100 largest public and 100 largest private companies, banks, and nonprofit groups headquartered in the metropolitan area, based on revenue and metrics specific to their industry. With its family of companies providing satellite, aerospace, and defense services, Integral Systems is proud to be recognized as an industry leader both locally and globally.

“We are honored to again receive this distinction from The Washington Post,” said Integral Systems CEO John Higginbotham. “Integral Systems strives for excellence in our business and we are pleased to be recognized as a valued corporate member of this local community. The company has been based out of the Washington, DC area since 1982 and we cannot imagine a better setting to headquarter our cutting-edge operations.”

With nearly half of its employees based in the Washington metropolitan area, Integral Systems develops integrated technology solutions for satellite interfaced systems for government and commercial customers. The company has served the U.S. Air Force, NASA, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and satellite operators around the globe for more than 25 years. Integral Systems has completed more than 200 satellite missions for communications, science, meteorological, and other applications.
